Technical Appendix

Sample Size

The results of this opinion poll are based upon a representative sample of 917 eligible Irish voters aged 18 years+.

Fieldwork

As such, the results can be deemed to be accurate to within plus or minus 3.3 percentage points at the 95% confidence level. Fieldwork was conducted on an in-home, face-to-face basis over the period, Monday 17th – Tuesday, 25th February, 2020.

Location

The sample was stratified across all constituencies at 125 locations in the country with individuals selected for interview by way of Demographic Quotas (age, gender, socio-economic status) in line with Central Statistics Office (CSO) and market research industry population estimates.

Weighting

The subsequent survey results are weighted to reflect the known demographic profile of Irish adults, utilising the most recently published census population estimates from the Central Statistics Office (CSO).

Party Support

Party support levels are subsequently realigned in accordance with a technical adjustment factor, designed to smooth the effects of extreme highs and lows in support levels for individual parties as measured at a single point in time, and taking variable election day turnout levels into account.

Guidelines

All aspects of the survey, including the Party Support adjustment factor, are implemented in accordance with the technical and ethical guidelines set down by the Association of Irish Market Research Organisations (AIMRO) and the European Society of Opinion & Market Research (ESOMAR).

Party Support Adjustment Factor: Technical Note

- Predicting election results on the basis of poll data is not an exact science. All the evidence shows that support for individual parties can swing dramatically in the period between elections- very often outside the bounds of historic election results.
- What to do in these circumstances? Most polling companies in Britain and Ireland publish their raw survey results as an index of fluctuations in the emotional mood of voters. They also build in an adjustment based on a number of factors. Where we have reports of how people voted in the last general election as well as how they intend to vote in the next one we can use these data to model the likely level of swing from the last election results.
- We then add back in the forecasts of voters who have not voted last time or do not answer that particular question.
- Finally we take into account each individuals stated likelihood of voting in a forthcoming General Election.
- This is the basis of the adjusted voting forecast in Behaviour & Attitudes polls.

Adjusted figures based on:

- All who state they would definitely vote
- Weighting of those respondents who give a definite answer as to who they would vote for in a general election and who they voted for in the last election, half way between stated voting intention and the result of the last election.
- Making no adjustment to stated voting intention of those who do not indicate how they voted in last election.

Q.11a Which of the following was the main reason you gave that party or Independent candidate your first preference vote in the General Election on February the 8th?
 Q.11b And what other reasons influenced your decision to vote for them?

Commentary

Background

The last Sunday Times/Behaviour & Attitudes national poll was conducted during the first two weeks of January and, as such, before the General Election campaign began.

This pre-campaign poll registered a seven percentage point drop in support for Fine Gael compared to the corresponding survey in December, leaving the party with just a 20% share of the vote. Most of Fine Gael's lost support at that stage had migrated to Fianna Fáil, with Independents and smaller parties also benefiting, albeit not as significantly.

Leo Varadkar had always claimed that his party would begin the election campaign on the backfoot, only to come powering through over the final two weeks when the electorate's attention would shift back to the economy and Brexit.

As we now know, this Fine Gael breakthrough never materialised. The election campaign began disastrously for the party when the Taoiseach instinctively shifted the blame for Dublin City Council's removal of a homeless person sleeping along the Grand Canal using a heavy digger, onto the Fianna Fáil Lord Mayor of the city. Things went downhill for Fine Gael from there, and its final share of the vote come election day stood at just over 20% - precisely in line with its pre-campaign standing.

Immediately prior to the beginning of the campaign, the election therefore seemed to be Fianna Fáil's to lose. While it was generally acknowledged that the formation of a coalition Government post-election would be far from straightforward, Fianna Fáil was at least confident that it would emerge with the greatest number of seats in the new Dáil and, as such, Micheál Martin would almost certainly be the next Taoiseach.

Background

As electioneering took off, it soon became apparent that Micheál Martin, rather than a broader Fianna Fáil team, would be running the party's campaign, a tactic borne of necessity, but one which began to wear thin with the public. On the hustings, and in the leaders debates, Martin appeared tetchy and worn, giving the impression to some that he felt he was simply there to pick up the Taoiseach's crown by natural default.

There is no doubt that both Fine Gael and Fianna Fáil completely misread the mood of the electorate. Rather than talk about the means by which they would bring about societal change, Martin and Varadkar argued over which of them was most entitled to become the next Taoiseach, a catastrophic strategic error that was deftly capitalised on by Mary Lou McDonald and Sinn Féin.

For its part, Sinn Féin had clearly learned from the mistakes it had made in the previous Presidential, and Local and European elections, and ran a thoughtful and upbeat policy-driven campaign, which provided voters with a clear alternative to the 'status quo' of Fianna Fáil and Fine Gael.

To an extent, the Green Party merely needed to maintain the support it had built up since the Local and European elections, and it did so admirably, capturing a share of the vote (7%) on a par with its pre-campaign poll rating.

We are of course all familiar with the net effect of all of the above dynamics, leading to this week's situation whereby a grand Fianna Fáil and Fine Gael plus Others coalition seems the most likely next Government, with the real negotiations on such a deal yet to even begin.

Party Support and Leader Satisfaction Levels

Fieldwork for today's poll was conducted over the period Monday 17th to Tuesday, 25th February. As such, survey respondents would have been aware of the final outcome of the election, and the various resultant coalition options.

In reviewing respondents' rating of Government and party satisfaction leaders in today's poll, we should keep in mind the fact that the Government they were asked to rate is a caretaker Government, the Taoiseach they were asked to appraise is an acting Taoiseach, and the leader of the Labour Party that they were asked to consider is merely biding his time until the election of his replacement.

Despite all of that, it is striking to note that Government satisfaction has essentially collapsed to just 21%, with seven in ten of all voters unhappy with the manner in which the country is currently being run. Leo Varadkar's personal satisfaction rating as Taoiseach has also declined significantly, with just over a quarter happy with his performance, and almost two-thirds unhappy.

Just three in ten of the electorate are satisfied with Micheál Martin's performance as leader of Fianna Fáil and Brendan Howlin's as leader of the Labour Party.

Perhaps not surprisingly given her party's dramatic successes in the election, and her high profile performances in post-election manoeuvrings, Mary Lou McDonald's rating as leader of Sinn Féin is the only one to have increased since last month – with over half (53%) of all voters satisfied with the job she is doing.

Compared to last month's poll, the increase in McDonald's popularity has been quite consistent across all socio-demographic groupings, albeit with marginally more Munster residents dissatisfied with the Sinn Féin leader (47%) than are satisfied (44%).

Party Support and Leader Satisfaction Levels

With regard to party support levels, it is clear that Sinn Féin is still on the crest of its election wave, with over a third of the electorate suggesting that they would now vote for the party in the event of another General Election. If a second election had been held over the last couple of weeks, Sinn Féin would presumably have run significantly more candidates, standing to win 60 or more seats in the Dáil, and practically guaranteed five years in Government with Mary Lou McDonald as Taoiseach.

The poll also suggests some further, albeit statistically insignificant, slippage in support since the election for both Fianna Fáil and Fine Gael, and it goes without saying that Leo Varadkar would be loathe to call another General Election based on such a scenario. Meanwhile, the Green Party and smaller entities continue to hold their own vis-à-vis the election results, with the Labour Party languishing on just 3%.

Taking all of the above into account, it does seem that the most likely outcome of the post-election negotiations will be a Fianna Fail, Fine Gael, Green Party and “Others” coalition.

If this is to materialise, the Green Party will drive a hard bargain in terms of the number of Ministries it receives. The Greens know that in entering into an arrangement that puts the “establishment” parties back into power, they risk being punished by the electorate in 2025, and will therefore wish to see as much of their agenda as possible fulfilled over the next five years.

Reasons for Voting

Towards the end of the interview, survey participants were asked to identify the one factor that was most influential in their decision as to who to vote for in the election on February 8th. Following this question, respondents were asked to identify what other reasons influenced their voting decision.

The results of the survey confirm the evidence already clear from the Sunday Times/Behaviour & Attitudes Pre-Election Polls, i.e. that by far the greatest factors influencing how people voted in the election related to the health service and housing-related issues.

Following health and housing, the next issue of greatest concern was the cost of living and, by definition, citizens' ability to make ends meet on a day-to-day basis.

While just under one in ten who voted for Fine Gael identified Brexit as their main reason for doing so, the issue was of no relevance to the vast majority of voters.

Looking at these figures it begs the question as to why Fine Gael felt it could run a successful campaign based upon its economic and Brexit-related track record, while effectively side-stepping people's frustration and anger regarding the key social issues of the day.

From today's survey, we can now see which issues were of most relevance to voters of specific parties. For example, those voting for both Fianna Fáil and Fine Gael were more likely than the average voter to have done so because of issues to do with the formation of a stable Government. Fianna Fáil and Sinn Féin voters were more likely than average to have voted for those parties for reasons to do with the age at which the state pension is paid.

Reasons for Voting

As mentioned, Fine Gael voters were far more likely than voters for all other parties to have opted for a Fine Gael candidate because of Brexit while, unsurprisingly, two-thirds of all Green Party voters selected that party because of Climate Change. Meanwhile those who voted for Fianna Fáil, Fine Gael and Independent candidates were more likely than voters for other parties to have done so because of issues in their own constituency.

Finally, those who voted for Sinn Féin and the Labour Party were significantly more likely than the average voter to have done so because of health service related issues, the cost of living and, in the case of Sinn Féin, affordable housing.
